

See How Much Your County Received From the Washington State Liquor Control Board in FY 2005

Each year, revenues earned through the sale and taxation of alcohol are returned to the state. In FY 2005, the WSLCB sent more than $263 million to the State General Fund, cities and counties, the Basic Health Program, prevention programs and research.

Cities and counties receive more than 20 percent of this money - $52.6 million in FY 2005. The money returned to local governments is used for prevention programs, law enforcement support and many other related programs and services.

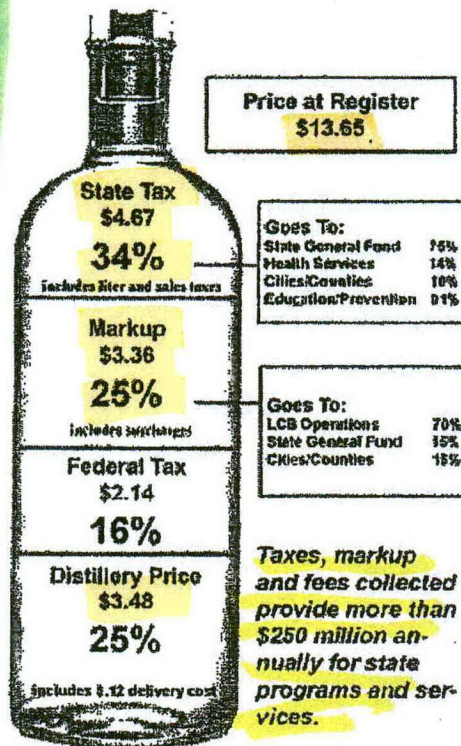

Each year the WSLCB tallies the amount of money sent back to each city and county statewide and distributes the information on 'report cards' placed in customer shopping bags in our state stores. This year, we are posting this information on our website to help illustrate how the money we earn positively affects every community in the state.
